1. INTRODUCTION

In 2010, 2012 and 2018 the Province of BC released various publications to dealing with sea level rise, sea dike design and climate change. The Regional District of Nanaimo (RDN) has established a Sea Level Rise and Climate Adaption Program that considers this guidance and the potential climate change impacts on future flood levels to their coastal and riverine systems. www.rdn.bc.ca/sea-level-rise-adaptation-program

The purpose of this Request for Proposal is to solicit submissions from qualified firms to replace the existing floodplain map for the Nanaimo River, issued by the Province of BC in May 1984. This map is considered outdated because the hydrologic model used to create the map does not consider upstream and downstream changes in the watershed, regional climate allowances nor the influence of rising sea levels. This project is designed to address this issue by conducting a hydrologic analysis, including climate change forecasting and subsequent hydraulic modeling of several design flood scenarios to estimate extents, depth and to update flood construction levels. The key output of this work will be up-to-date riverine floodplain regulatory map and to complete a risk assessment informed by these findings and stakeholder input.

This project is partly funded through a grant from the National Disaster Mitigation Program that stipulates the final deliverables related to the regulatory floodplain map must be submitted no later than March 31, 2022.

2. BACKGROUND

The Nanaimo River is part of the Georgia Basin drainage network located on central Vancouver Island. The Nanaimo River watershed ranges from the Island Range to sea level, draining through Jump Lake into the Strait of Georgia within the boundaries of the City of Nanaimo, Snuneymuxw Reserve Lands and the RDN, Electoral Area A.

As with other rivers in the region, the Nanaimo River is primarily a rain-driven hydrologic system, influenced by heavy fall and winter rain or snow. The majority of the flow occurs in the fall and winter with low discharge in the summer period. The Nanaimo River floodplain has been designated by the Government of BC as a “high risk” floodplain. The river has a long-standing history of flooding, with extreme events due to a combination of rainfall and high tide, such as in 1949, 2007 and 2014. The most recently extreme event was in January 2020, triggering the temporary displacement of on-reserve and Electoral Area A residents.

3. SCOPE OF SERVICES

The proposal must provide a clear and concise information on the approach and methodology demonstrating how it aligns with the Guidelines for Flood Mapping in BC (EGBC, 2017) and with reference to the Flood Hazard Area Land Use Management Guidelines (MFLNRO, 2016). Based on this guidance, develop a hydraulic model for the flood hazard area. It's worth noting the RDN has recently completed coastal flood hazard modelling and mapping; the applicable information is to be incorporated into the analysis of this project to reduce duplication and to integrate the findings into the flow model to determine flood extent under combined influences. The study area boundary is the extent shown on the existing Provincial floodplain maps.

The scope may include, but not necessarily limited to the following tasks:

- review existing materials and utilize existing data wherever possible, such as the most recent LiDAR ground elevation data released by the Province in 2019;
- acquire new information/ data as needed, such as riverine bathymetry and mapping and determine coastal still water levels;
- determine climate allowances for river flow in consultation with the RDN then incorporate into the analysis and mapping;
- prepare flood scenarios based on the project objectives, it is anticipated that 6 to 9 flood scenarios will be analyzed, including existing and future conditions. For example: Existing (0.5% AEP, 10% AEP, mean, bankfull), Future Year 2100 (0.5% AEP, 10% AEP, mean, bankfull);
- conduct geospatial mapping activities to produce maps of current and forecasted design flood extents, velocity and risk (as applicable);
- develop riverine floodplain regulatory map that reflects maximum flood extent with peak river scenario with a representative coastal water level (to be extracted from the RDN's recently completed coastal flood hazard maps);
- conduct a risk assessment to assess likelihood, exposure and consequences for at least six consequence variables, representing social, economic and environmental impacts. The risk assessment framework will be confirmed through a workshop with the project's working group. Further workshop(s) will be held with identified stakeholders to seek input on key priorities and areas of concern;
- prepare draft and final design brief and regulatory floodplain map;
- prepare a draft and final public-facing overview report to help communicate the findings to the general public and property owners who may be affected.

Note: For Quality Management & Reporting, firms and individual engineering professionals engaged in this work are required to be registered with Engineers and Geoscientists of BC (EGBC).
